

3-4 November 2015 UW Diversity Forum Featuring Pulitzer Prize-winning Journalist Clarence Page

The 2015 Diversity Forum, "Call to Action: Taking Our Diversity Work into Broader, Deeper and More Inclusive Waters" takes place on Tuesday, Nov. 3, and Wednesday, Nov. 4, in Union South's Varsity Hall. A continental breakfast and lunch will be provided on both days.

The University of Wisconsin-Madison has presented annual Diversity Forums since 1998. Now in its 17th year, this centerpiece event for the university's Division of Diversity, Equity and Educational Achievement (DDEEA) continues to address issues stretching beyond the borders of campus. All members of the community - university-affiliated or not - are invited to attend the free two-day forum.

Pulitzer Prize-winning Chicago Tribune Columnist Clarence Page will serve as the keynote speaker of the 2015 UW Diversity Forum.

Mr. Page has been a columnist and a member of the Chicago Tribune editorial board since July 1984. His column is syndicated nationally by Tribune Media Services. He also participated in a Chicago Tribune vote fraud investigation, which won the 1972 Pulitzer Prize for public service. Page shared a 1980 Illinois UPI (United Press International) award for an investigative series titled "The Black Tax," and a 1976 Edward Scott Beck Award for overseas reporting in Southern Africa.

"We're going to dive into the continuing urgency to define and address some of the longstanding issues of our time with a specific focus on our region and state," says Patrick J. Sims, vice provost and chief diversity officer. "We're beginning to see the pieces come together from the implementation of UW-Madison's Diversity Framework to how we effectively reach out to support the communities that are inextricably the ties and targets of the Wisconsin Idea."
